RANKS OF STRIKERS HAVE BEEN INCREASED

Colder Weather Makes the Miners Joyful

ARBITRATION TALK IS PERSISTENT

Only a Small Band at Work in All of the Lackawana and Wyoming Region. Cannot Be Induced to Stop Because They were well Treated

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 18.—If, as president Mitchell of the United Mine workers claimed last night 112,000 of 141,000 mine workers of the Pennsylvania anthracite coal fields were idle yesterday, it is certain this number has been considerably augmented today by additions to the strikers' ranks. Reports from the four big districts, embracing the hard coal region are to the effect that fewer men are at work today than yesterday and the collieries, which worked full handed or nearly so yesterday, were either badly crippled or shut down today.

The weather has grown much colder since yesterday and this change is greeted with joy by the mine workers, who believe it will greatly increase the demand for coal and thus force an early adjustment of the differences between them and the employers. Talk of arbitration is so persistent that the hope is growing that this method of settling the strike will be finally adopted, although the mine owners declare they will deal only with their employees as individuals and the strike leaders say they will insist upon the formal recognition of the union. This difference would appear sufficiently strong to keep employer and employee apart forever, if persisted in.

One little band of miners in the Wyoming valley and those of the West End coal company at Moccasin, numbering a few hundred men, stand out prominently as the only men at work out of nearly 80,000 in the Lackawana and Wyoming region. Efforts to induce them to join the strikers have failed. They say they always have been treated kindly, have no grievance and will therefore, remain loyal to their employers.

Hazleton, Pa., Sept. 18.—The second day of the anthracite coal miners strike began quietly in this district. What little change there was in the situation this morning was in favor of the strikers. Reports received from all parts of the district show not one break in the ranks. The mines have fewer workers than yesterday. The first strikers march occurred this morning. One hundred from McAdoo and Yorktown, with a brass band, marched through the south side to the Coleraine colliery to induce men to quit.

There was no attempt at force. A band of Hungarian women with clubs surrounded the Crawford and Dugan strippings.

Oswego, N. Y., Sept. 18.—The miners' strike in Pennsylvania threatens the Oswego coal famine. Only one firm has any coal on hand to supply the trade and that will soon be exhausted. The big trestles are shut down. Much suffering will be caused.

THOUSANDS ARE IDLE

Almost Complete Tie-Up in the Anthracite Regions of Pennsylvania

Hazleton, Pa., Sept. 18.—The great coal strike in the anthracite regions of Pennsylvania is now well under way. Reports from all fields indicate that the tie-up is at least as complete as the leaders of the United Mine Workers of America claimed at any time. Companies and individuals owning mines, who claimed that their workings would operate as usual, despite the strike order, apparently reckoned without accurate knowledge of the attitude of their men.

VICTORY FOR BLACKS IN CUBAN ELECTIONS

Whites Are Now For Annexation and Blacks Are Frenzied

Santiago, Cuba, Sept. 18.—The elections of delegates to the constitutional convention have resulted in favor of the black party in the entire province and the whites now openly declare themselves annexationists. Ten thousand colored men who worked themselves to frenzy, paraded last night carrying candles torches and banners inscribed, "Death to the republican party."

A mock funeral of the republican party was held today by the colored men.

THE NETHERLANDS PARLIAMENT OPENS

The Hague, Sept. 18.—The parliament of the Netherlands was reopened today by Queen Wilhelmina, accompanied by the queen's mother. In the speech from the throne, her majesty referred to the continued friendly relations with foreign countries with the exception of China and mentioned the conventions of the peace conference which have been ratified by almost all the powers.

The queen also said: "I hope the international bureau of arbitration will shortly be established here and fulfill the end for which it was founded, by assisting in a peaceful settlement of the differences between nations, a work the importance of which cannot be too highly rated." The only direct reference to the South African war and Chinese troubles were her majesty's mention of the "two deplorable events," necessitating the presence of Netherlands' warships for the protection of Hollanders.

Her majesty pronounced the finances of the country to be in a satisfactory condition, but said further taxation measures were necessary principally to cover the cost of compulsory education.

LARGE DEAL IN STEEL INDUSTRY

Pittsburg, Sept. 18.—The American Sheet steel company and the Republic iron and steel company have entered into an agreement whereby the former withdraws from the merchant bar trade and the latter from the sheet production.

In this deal the sheet company secured the sheet mills of the Republic at Toledo, Fronton, Hazleton and Youngstown, Ohio, and Alexandria, Ind., and will dismantle them along with the three sheet mills at Sharon, Pa.

The Republic gets the big bar mill and Reaves plant at Canal and Dover, Ohio, and will move the machinery to other mills.

New York, Sept. 18.—The tug America of the New York harbor tug company was run into by the Atlantic liner Minnehaha and sunk, and two lives lost off Canal street this morning.

THREE DAYS WITHOUT FOOD

Former Local Man's Experience in Galveston Flood

The St. Louis Chronicle has the following story in regard to former well known local men in the Galveston flood: W. L. Sheldon, car accountant of the Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fe, at Galveston, brother of W. L. Sheldon, clerk in the Frisco office, in St. Louis, had a thrilling experience in the Galveston storm, and saved his life by remaining on the second floor of the office building for three days without food or water, while other houses were crumbling around him.

"My brother wrote me," said W. H. Sheldon to The Chronicle Friday morning, "that the building in which he was located was new and strong, and when the flood rushed through the streets and burst the doors and windows, he and his companions fled to the second story, while the lower floor was flooded to a depth of eight feet. All of the widows were crushed in by the terrible wind, and when they looked into the street they saw a veritable procession of corpses floating past. The occupants of this building were all saved. My brother says he will remain in Galveston."

Relief Funds For Galveston Reach into Seven Figures

Cremating the Dead. Fears of Epidemic Removed by Use of Medicines and Disinfectants

Galveston, Tex., Sept. 18.—The relief funds received amount to seven figures. They are being used judiciously and good effects are already apparent. The authorities are reluctantly forced to the opinion that the number of dead placed at 5000 is too low and will go above 6000. Consideration of all facts place the property loss at twenty-two millions and a half.

Fears of an epidemic are allayed in the presence of the distribution of medicines and disinfectants.

MOST GRUESOME TASK

Sanitary Reasons Require Cremation of Victims of the Galveston Horror

Galveston, Tex., Sept. 18.—The work of clearing the streets of debris and wreckage is progressing steadily and with systematic rapidity. The military authorities have gradually perfected the system, and divided the laborers so that there is comparatively no interruption or delay in the undertaking. On Sunday 107 bodies were recovered and cremated. The number cremated yesterday will exceed 100.

The task of recovering the bodies jammed beneath the debris, extending

GREAT UNEASINESS AT LOURENZO MARQUEZ

Roberts Reports Minor Skirmishes. Gen. French Has Captured More Locomotives

Lorenzo, Marquez, Sept. 18.—Fighting is proceeding at Komatiport. All available men were sent to the frontier.

It is expected that Komati bridge will be destroyed. Great uneasiness prevails here.

London, Sept. 18.—Lord Roberts reports from Mashadodorp, Monday, a few minor skirmishes that had taken place between the British and Boers. He adds General French captured 50 locomotives, in addition to the 1 locomotive and other rolling stock he took when he occupied Marbenton, September 13, and General Stevenson is expected to occupy Nelspruit during the afternoon of September 17.

COUNT VON WALDERSEE ARRIVES AT HONG KONG

President McKinley Leaves Canton For Washington on Account of Acuteness of Chinese Situation

Hong Kong, Sept. 18.—The German steamer Saschoen with Commander-in-Chief Field Marshal Count von Waldersee and staff arrived today.

It is reported in the West river district that Chinese troops are visible in every town actively drilling.

A Chinese gunboat is again patrolling the river and it is evident some action is contemplated.

The field marshal landed and was received by a guard of honor of English troops. He made the usual official calls.

He will proceed to Shanghai, thence to Taku this evening by a German cruiser.

Canton, Oct. 13.—President McKinley and Secretary Cortelyou started for Washington at 1:30 o'clock today.

The decision for the start to Washington was reached yesterday, the New York Herald's correspondent understands. The only direct reason assigned at the McKinley home is that matters of state demand the president's attention in Washington, as he can attend to them better there than here.

It can be stated on authority, however, that the Chinese question has assumed such shape that it will be necessary for the president to consult with the state department and with cabinet members. To this he thinks it will be more convenient and more satisfactory for himself and more satisfactory for all directly concerned to be in Washington.

A JOINT PRESENTATION

Keasage and Alabama Receive Tablets from New Hampshire. Famous Fight in Cherbourg in 1864 Recalled

Portsmouth, N. H., Sept. 18.—The presentation today of the tablets to the modern battleships Keasage and Alabama was one of the most interesting and historical events in the history of the Granite state.

The exercises began at 11 o'clock, but because of the enormous crowd who wished to see and hear the speakers, the unveiling of the tablets and the formal presentation were made on shore. The exercises were opened by Mayor McIntyre, who welcomed the guests, and he was followed by George A. Burns, president of the day. Governor Rollins made the presentation speech, after the two tablets had been unveiled by two young ladies, respectively descendants of relatives of the former officers of the two famous old battleships. Secretary Long accepted the tablet for the Keasage. Governor Johnston, in accepting the tablet for the Alabama, said:

"It is fit that the commonwealth of New Hampshire, a commonwealth the mother of Webster, that great apostle of an indestructible Union of indestructible states, should be the first, officially, not only to rise superior to the passions and prejudices of a fratricidal war, but to determine to commemorate and honor the gallant deeds of the American sailor without regard to the flag which floated over him."

"Men may differ about the right or wrong of any cause, and they may conscientiously take one side or the other. A great nation worthy of liberty and inspired by lofty sentiments cannot fail to honor courage and heroism by whomsoever displayed; and especially should it do so when these heroes are descendants of the very men who gave so freely of their blood and treasure to secure the independence of our common country."

"We have met here in the beautiful language chosen by your state to perpetuate in enduring place names once associated in historic combat. The commander of one of those ships was born in my native state, and the ashes of the other repose in the bosom of my adopted state. When Semmes passed over the ether to rest in the shade he carried in his heart no resentment towards the gallant Winslow."

"Upon that fateful Sunday morning in June, 1864, when the Alabama sailed out of the harbor of Cherbourg to meet the Keasage, each commander knew that he had a foe worthy of his steel, for they had been friends and comrades in the past. When they met they were to meet in the embrace of death. The vessels were nearly evenly matched. The Keasage had seven guns and 163 men, and the Alabama eight guns and 145 men. The guns of the Keasage carried more metal. For one hour and 40 minutes they sailed around each other in a fiery circle, hurling their missiles of death. The Keasage was struck 23 times and had one historic shell lodged in her exploded it is probable that she would have gone down before the Alabama. Semmes fought his ship until he had lost one-fourth of his men and never struck his flag until he felt her sinking under his feet."

"When the battle ended the Alabama found her way in the sea. There she slumbered until this resurrection morn, when she reappears once more, the consort instead of the enemy of the Keasage, to fight under the same flag and against all enemies of the republic. This memorial tablet joins them in enduring friendship, and the commanders of both will have the heroism of Winslow and Semmes to inspire them to gallant deeds."

"How much grander it is to unite in enduring peace than to separate by bloody war. If war shall come again, as doubtless it will continue to come so long as human selfishness and greed shall prevail over Christian charity and tolerance, and so long as the ambition of man, the lust of power and conquest and dominion shall be stronger than the love of justice and liberty and equality; and if the Keasage, in deadly and unequal combat, shall search the horizon for coming help, I know that this tablet and its inspiring inscription will give swift wings to the Alabama to hasten to the rescue and turn her flaming guns upon the common enemy."

"I feel that I may also for my people that if an invading army shall ever press its bloody heel upon your shores and, by superior numbers, drive your troops from the coast, let some descendant of Starke rally them at the foot of your great mountain, kindle a fire on its loftiest peak and you will soon hear the impatient tramp of the gallant sons of Alabama. Then side by side with the men of New Hampshire they will never stay their irascible steps until the flaming cross of Alabama shall, on the seashore, salute the Stars and Stripes floating victoriously from the mastsheads of the Keasage and the Alabama."

"This tablet with its proud inscription that will be riveted upon the stout timbers of the Alabama has already left an un fading image upon the hearts of our people, one that will forever unite New Hampshire with her mettlesome Maine and thriving cities and thrifty people in enduring peace with Alabama, the fairest of all the fair states in the fair land of the sun and the sky."

After Governor Johnston's address the tablets were then taken down the harbor to the Keasage and formally turned over to the commanding officer of that boat, as well as to Captain Brownson, who will command the Alabama. At the latter exercise, former Secretary Herbert of Alabama made an interesting speech.

Female Thief Confesses.
Boston, Sept. 18.—Harriet Calles, a colored domestic, had signed a confession at the office of the fire marshal to the robbery of about $600 worth of clothing from the closets of a woman for whom she worked. Her method of covering up the larceny was by setting fire to a variety of clothing after she had disposed of all the fair states in the fair land of the sun and the sky."

Speedy Torpedo Boat.
The torpedo boat destroyer Viper, which is fitted with Parsons' turbine engines, had a three hours' coal consumption trial in the Solent recently, says the London correspondent of the New York Sun. She averaged close to 24 knots without forcing. She covered one measured mile at a rate of speed within a fraction of 50 knots per hour. This is the fastest time recorded by any warship. The Viper exceeded her contract requirements by five knots. Twenty-six tons is about 11 miles.

THE CYNIC.
People need a little common sense more than they need a lot of money. The women still wear Mother Hubbards, but they are calling them kimonoes. You're a coward. You may deny it, but down in your heart you know you're one.

Nothing in the world looks easier or more prosperous than another man's business.

Your foolish days are not over until you feel sorry for people who are going away on the cars instead of envying them.

There is occasionally a pleasant side to economy—the dumplings, for instance, that are made to make the chicken "go round."

Some women's idea is that they are not doing their duty to their families unless they annually stick a clove in a peach or two and put them away in brandy.

When a man gets a new watch, he carries it in a chamom bag for at least two weeks. Then he neglects the watch as he neglected the old one and begins dropping it on the floor.

Female Thief Confesses.
Boston, Sept. 18.—Harriet Calles, a colored domestic, had signed a confession at the office of the fire marshal to the robbery of about $600 worth of clothing from the closets of a woman for whom she worked. Her method of covering up the larceny was by setting fire to a variety of clothing after she had disposed of all the fair states in the fair land of the sun and the sky."

FINE MEMORIAL SHAFT.

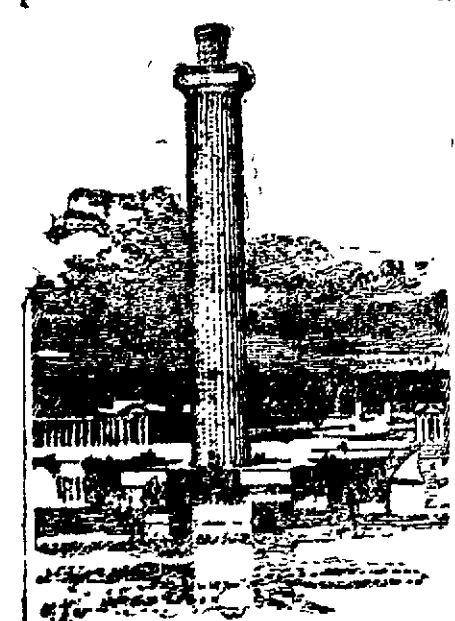

Unique Monument Proposed For Detroit's Bicentennial.

WILL COST A MILLION DOLLARS.

The Money to be Raised by Free Contributions—Design of Structure is a Gift From Five of America's Leading Architects, Sculptors and Painters—The Dimensions.

In the September Century an account is given of the magnificent monument with which the city of Detroit proposes to celebrate its bicentennial on July 24, 1901. Two pictures illustrate it.

There are features of this enterprise which make it of more than local interest. The design is a gift, for the sake of art, from five of America's leading architects, sculptors and painters, and its transmutation into marble is to be a freewill offering of the community. Not one cent of the required millions of dollars is to be raised by taxation or by any means other than voluntary contribution. Side by side are written the subscriptions of the factory girl and the millionaire—unequal in amount, but not in significance. Many gifts were made in memory of men who had been identified with the early DETROIT'S PROPOSED MEMORIAL COLUMN. Life of this section or simply as tributes to departed friends, connecting by a link of tenderness the givers and the monument.

As the result of co-operation between a Democratic mayor and a Republican senator it was decided about two years ago that a permanent memorial in some way typical of local history should be erected and further, upon the suggestion of Charles L. Freer, that advice should be sought from prominent artists as to the character and location of the memorial. Five advisers were selected, Stanford White representing the architects, Augustus St. Gaudens and Frederick MacMonnies the sculptors and Dwight W. Tryon and Thomas W. Dewing the painters. These men were so impressed by the possibilities of the project that they volunteered to work out the problem and have declined compensation for the services thus rendered. The credit for the design is Mr. White's. Detroit was visited, every possible site was surveyed, and the history and traditions of the locality were studied. Afterward, at a meeting in New York, the advisers unanimously adopted the plan embodied in the following report, which was presented by Mr. White before a gathering of citizens at the Detroit Museum of Art on Feb. 22, 1900:

"The design contemplates the erection of a great Doric column, the highest in the world, surrounded by groups of sculpture in the water, treated in the character of the memorial columns of classic time and supporting a tripod which would assume a torchlike character at night by the use of electricity and by a great flame of natural gas, so characteristic of the west and impossible elsewhere. This light at night would command the river and both lakes.

"The design further contemplates as a support and surrounding to the column a great basin flanked by flights of steps supporting colonnades, in the center of which would rest the statue of Cadillac or a group of sculpture embodying, with the statue of Cadillac, the story of the discoverers, and upon the connecting esplanade positions are afforded for the future erection of statues of distinguished citizens of Detroit.

"In order that the column should center on the avenue of trees which now exists upon the island and be seen from one end of the Grand Central boulevard to the other the present casino would have to be removed and the avenue of trees connected with the column by a formal rectangular lake, in which illuminated fountains might play at night and upon each side of which formal gardens are part of the design.

The column will measure 24 feet in diameter at the base and rise to a height of 220 feet. The colonnades forming the court are 900 feet in length, with a wing at each end protecting 300 feet. The shaft, pillars, corner pavilions and steps will be of America's fairest marble, in striking contrast to the deep blue of the river and the background of forest trees, untouched since the days of the Indian. The surrounding tripod of bronze will be a fitting addition, and its flame of gas, direct from nature's laboratory, will be seen far up and down the highway of the great lakes.

In a footnote the editor says: "As we go to press we learn that the above project may be abandoned for lack of funds. Even if the contemplated memorial be not realized, the artistic value of the design makes it worthy of record."

THE BOXER OUTBREAK.

Chinese Version of the Cause of the Present Trouble.

OPINION OF PRINCE KWANG SU.

In a Letter to the Chinese Consul General at San Francisco He Says the Trouble Was Caused by Foreigners Grossly Insulting Dowager Empress on the Streets.

George Dewey Fung, a young Chinaman employed in a tea store in Trenton, has received a letter from Wang Hop, the Chinese consul general at San Francisco, in which that official relates the different causes which have led up to the present crisis in China, says the Philadelphia Times. The consul general is an intimate friend of young Fung, and correspondence has been going on between them for some time.

When the trouble began, Fung wrote to the consul general asking him to write to some official connected with the Chinese government for the Chinese version of the cause of the trouble, and a few weeks ago the consul received a letter from Prince Kwang Su, dated July 1, and sent from the imperial palace at Peking. He immediately forwarded the letter he received to young Fung. It is written on red paper and in one corner is stamped with the imperial coat of arms. According to the consul it is the first authentic version of the Chinese side of the present war question. The letter reads as follows:

In your letter you ask for my opinion in regard to the real cause of the uprising of the Boxers. I can give it to you in a very few words.

It really began Jan. 1, the empress' birthday, and the hatred has grown greater and greater each day against foreigners until you see what it has now reached.

I, myself, as you know, have always favored the admittance of foreigners and giving to the missionaries the right to preach their different doctrines at all times and places. But in this trouble the foreigners are somewhat to blame, but not all.

Jan. 1, the empress' birthday, was celebrated with the usual pomp and ceremony, as it always is, and we had our usual procession about the city.

When the carriage containing her majesty drew near the Hungarian quarter, near the main gate, it was stopped by a large crowd of Hungarians, including several missionaries. They made a great noise and called our sovereign many vile names, and the troops had to be called out to disperse them. Five of the missionaries who, I think, owing to their sympathy for the emperor, encouraged their people to insult her majesty, were arrested and put in prison and a strong guard was placed about the Hungarian quarters.

As soon as the Hungarian minister learned of their imprisonment he went at once to the imperial palace and demanded that they be released. The empress refused to grant his request, saying that she heard of the lights that had been occurring between her people and the Hungarians for some time. She said that she was told that the trouble was always caused by their insulting some of the Chinese as they passed through that quarter. She told the minister that she did not believe it until she personally encountered the same insults.

Her refusal to release the missionaries was met with a storm of indignation on the part of the Hungarians. Two nights after their imprisonment they all turned out and stormed the jail and overpowered the guards. The troops were called out, and the Hungarians began firing at them, killing many. The troops returned the fire, and many people fell, including women and children. When the news of the insulting of the empress, the attack on the prisoners and the encounter with the troops reached the other provinces, the feeling against foreigners grew very bitter.

After this I have known many of our own people to openly insult foreigners on the street, not because they were justified in doing so, but out of pure prejudice.

I soon learned that missionaries in the other provinces were attacked and killed by our people, but I believe that the real cause of these uprisings was that they wished to avenge the insult upon the empress at Peking. Soon I learned of the Boxers taking the matter in hand, and the result you know, so there is no use in my explaining.

Old Glory at Peking.

[Editorial Note: Fourteenth United States Infantry, was the first to scale the city wall.—Peking Dispatch.]

Hot in the parching sunlight the Tartar City lay; Behind its walls imprisoned were the world's sinners at bay.

Pallid and starved, yet hoping for the dawn of the rescue day.

Just when despair was brooding on each heart like a pall

The welcome hum of the Yankee drum was heard

'neath the Peking wall

And the rattles of musketry—near—near!—and the notes the bugle's call;

"Dear God! 'tis true! The boys in blue are scaling the yellow wall!"

Then they saw a youthful figure in the blessed coat of blue:

In his arms he bore—a thankful roar rose the air as he opened the wall

The flag of their dear loved home land. And the gallant led them out

To the sunny air that banner fair, while a mighty thronging shout

Burst from the rescued legions as his stalwart form stood by.

While the flag of the free waved joyously 'neath that deadly alien sky.

When late gathers in her children with her pealing bugle call,

She will smile on the boy who bore our flag to the top of Peking wall.

A CYCLING BALLAD.

Oh, why doth Hubert sit apart
And make such doleful cheer?
To him the world is black and gray,
The times are out of gear.

His grief, his melancholy, is
From day to day the same,
The picture of a sorrow that
With sobbs doth shake the frame.

Oh, Hubert loved a maiden, and
He loved the maiden well;
She was the fairest daughter of
The countryside she dwelt.

'Twas not for him, a low born clerk,
With rank and state to wed;
Who went, with pack upon his back,
His faithful to bed.

But love knows all distinctions, and
The cost is never counted;
His Oath is a flame that is Forever higher mounted.

And Hubert, 'neath the lady's bowers,
In high falutin manner,
Nor you nor may she said, and yet
His fond heart knew no fear.

One month he's been upon his rounds,
Away from home so dear;
His heart it yearns, and now he turns
A gladstone course to wear.

But four short weeks, and absence feed
The flame of love's young torch;
Her bow in sight, it burns so bright
That he is like to smother.

Below her window, barred, he sits,
All underneath the stars;
He climb he'd fain, but it were vain
To climb and handle bars.

And so he sighs, as hours will,
In high falutin manner,
'Would she were by my side that I
Around her waist might spanner.

But, lo, the shadowy forms that o'er
The grassy silence slip!
Before he has perceived them they
Right up to his side slip.

'What bird of ill omen art thou
That here dost caw and creak?
'I bid thee answer!' and it was
The baron's voice that spoke.

'I am the padder, Hubert, and
I fain would have for bride
Thy beautiful daughter, but I know
My suit thou wouldst deride.'

'Don't load and load the barren laundress,
While Hubert knelt and trusted;
'Last week my daughter went to church
And to a snail was buckled!'

Young Hubert fell unto the ground
As though struck by a club.
'Nay, nay!' he cried, but they replied,
'Tis a snail, and she's a snail!'

He did not know what he in dreams
Of sleeping or awake;
Of his love rebbed, he simply sobbed
As though his heart would break.

But soon they brought him round again
With many a cuff and thump.
Then took and held his added pate
Beneath the streaming pump.

And that's why Hubert sits apart,
Canst wonder how at him?
His bitter cup is full right up
And running o'er his rim.

NOT PARTICULAR.

The Private Was Too Hungry to Choose His Company.

A crowd of old Confederates were swarming war stores last night when one of them told the following:

"One of the most striking figures in the armies of the west was General Joan Magruder, C. S. A. He was what might be called a 'Murrat' of a man, for in the hardest times 'Prince John' could always show a natty uniform, and he always went into battle, the soldiers said, with enough fuss and feathers to have marched down a dozen men. It was evidently his determination to die not only with his boots on, but with all his good clothes as well. Added to his love of dress was a fondness for good eating that led him to every promising home near a camping ground.

"On one occasion, with his staff, he rode up to a handsome old fashioned home in Tennessee, and with his most courtly bow and gallant manner hinted that food would not be unacceptable to famished soldiers. The woman of the mansion bade them enter, and hastily sent servants running hither and thither to provide a meal for such handsome and gallant soldiers.

"About the time the dinner was weighing down the table and just before the officers had been invited to enter the dining room a poor private, who in peace would have been styled a gentleman, sneaked up to the back door and begged a bite to eat.

"The hospitable hostess, absolutely ignorant of military etiquette, told him to 'come in immediately; that dinner was just on the table.'

"The officers, General Magruder and the rest, are just getting ready to eat, she said. 'You are in nice time.'

"'Had he not been so hungry the private might have run on the spot, but hunger conquers all fears, and he quickly followed his hostess into the dining room, determined to snatch a few bites and run before he could be sent to the guardhouse.

"The officers had not entered. The private slipped into a seat and began a savage attack on the food before him. Chicken, ham and everything in sight and reach were seized by the hungry soldier. When 'Prince John' and the staff came in, he expected nothing less than death.

"The door opened, and with the hostess on his arm General Magruder entered the dining room. The staff was close behind.

"In a moment the general saw the private.

"'What are you doing there?' thundered the officer.

"The private sent half a corn pone to join the chicken he had just swallowed and reached for a piece of ham. He was too busy to talk.

"General Magruder strode up in his splendid uniform and touched the dirty gray coated figure sitting composedly at the table.

"'Sirrah, do you know with whom you are to eat?'
"The soldier never looked up. He only granted out between bites: 'Don't know—don't care. Was a time once when I was mighty particular. All that gone now. Too hungry—willing to eat with anybody.'

"He was allowed to finish his meal."

NOTICE.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Fitchburg Railroad company will be held in Horticultural hall, Tremont street, Boston, on the last Wednesday in September, 1900, being the twenty-sixth day of the month, at eleven o'clock, a. m., for the following purposes:

1. To consider if the stockholders will authorize the directors to issue the bonds of this company to an amount not exceeding five hundred thousand dollars ($500,000.00) on such time and upon such terms as they may see fit, to provide means for the payment of five hundred thousand dollars ($500,000.00) five per cent bonds of this company, maturing October 1, 1900.

2. To amend the second By-Law so that the number of directors thereafter shall not exceed fifteen.

3. For the election of Directors for the ensuing year.

4. To transact any other business which may properly come before said meeting.

The Transfer Books will be closed from the 19th to the 28th day of September, 1900, both inclusive.

PAUL CROCKER, Clerk.
Boston, September 14, 1900.

By the terms of the lease to the Boston and Maine railroad, stockholders will be passed on the Fitchburg railroad free to the place of meeting, on any regular passenger train of Tuesday, September 25, 1900, or on any regular passenger train due to arrive in Boston before eleven o'clock a. m. of the day of the meeting. Returning, they will be passed free only on regular passenger trains of the afternoon of the day of the meeting.

To entitle them to free passage, stockholders must exhibit to the conductors their certificates of stock, and those representing stockholders, certificates of stock with proxies.

CONSUL WILLIAMS' VISIT

The republicans of North Adams and vicinity will have an opportunity Thursday night in the visit of ex-Congressman Williams. Mr. Williams was consul at Manila and knows as much as any man about Philippine character and the Philippine situation. He knows Aguinaldo well and should be able to give us much information at first hand. Mr. Williams is an able and entertaining speaker. He should have more than a half-full to hear him.

NEW BUT NICE

Of course we were proud and gay last night. We opened the Richmond theater in a wave of magnificence such as we have not dreamed of passing over this city. Too, we had her who was the fascinating, hoydenish Glory Quayle, but is now the Dona Dolores, to preside at the opening. She may not just now become herself as well in her new-found company—nobles and kings and what-nots—as she did when she was breaking the heart of the ill-balanced John Storm, but we'll wager he'll improve as she grows more accustomed to the family. She is fair on the way to wealth and title now, and that would suit almost any woman, particularly if she sprang from nobody and nowhere, had to earn a living by singing and, for pure pity, agreed to share the lot of a notional preacher.

We opened the Richmond theatre, had Miss Allen there and felt proud to the bursting of our suspender buttons. We are not as big as we'll be, but we have ambition and the push and we do not propose to forge ahead without lots of entertainment. So the Richmonds built us a theatre and last night we turned out to its opening. We were happy and gay and for the life of us we couldn't make sure whether we were in North Adams or not. There was so much that was city grand about us—that is city-grand as New York and Boston go—that we wanted to get to the theatre door and look out on Main street to see if we were here. It was as new to us as it was to Glory and both of us were in about the same fix. She had to be the fine lady all at once, and we had to be elegant people or shame that woman with the cupids around her that they have painted on the walls. But we'll get accustomed to it, and we'll take to going to the play in boxes like a duck takes to water.

A FEW CONVERTS

Two hundred prominent men, supporters of either Bryan or Palmer in 1896, have been found by the republican national committee who this year are supporting McKinley and Roosevelt. A list of these men was given out Saturday at the republican headquarters, and returns from nine states are included.

Republican managers express elation over the character and standing of the men who opposed McKinley four years ago and now favor his election. After recalling the declarations for McKinley by Senator William M. Stewart, former Senators John M. Palmer, Lee Mantle and William A. Peffer and former Mayor Abram S. Hewitt, the committee gives a long list of others who are out for McKinley.

Among the converts named are George W. McDonald of Indiana, former secretary of the gold democratic committee; Captain W. E. English, cop of the old time democratic leader of Indiana; M. E. Ingalls, president of the "Big Four" railroad; Frank Jones of New Hampshire; John K. Cowen, resident of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad; and Euclid Martin, former democratic congressman of Omaha. Many Illinois citizens are given among the McKinley supporters. In the list are J. M. Dill and A. S. Willard, judges of the circuit court; James M. McKelvie, former controller of the currency; Edward Abend, a democratic presidential elector four years ago; W. R. Curran, democratic judge of Tazewell county; John T. Pollock, former democratic assemblyman; Owen S. Decatur, former democratic representative in congress; Dr. Julius Kohl, member of the state board of health under former Governor Altgeld, and William K. Murphy, former democratic state senator.

From Colorado the list includes I. N. Stevens, former chairman of the national silver republican party; T. S. McMurray, former mayor of Denver; Charles D. Hyatt, former judge of the supreme court; Judson Brush, former supreme court; Judson Brush, former United States senator; Frank Kratzer, city clerk of Denver; Major E. W. Hurlburt, former speaker of the Colorado house of representatives; Sheriff J. W. Beaman, Richard Broad, former chairman of the silver republican committee; District Judges O. B. Le Fevre, C. C. Holbrook and W. N. Dixon and a dozen presidents of banks and business concerns.

In Iowa the McKinley converts include Judge J. C. Mitchell, Judge Nystrom, and the Rev. P. M. Nystrom, who spoke for Bryan four years ago among the Swedish citizens.

Several prominent populists are in the list of Kansas converts, W. E. Kibbe, a delegate to the populist convention in Sioux Falls, J. H. Dunsmore, former populist speaker of the house of representatives, and F. L. Horton, mayor of Clifton, are among those who have declared for McKinley.

From Missouri, Massachusetts, Montana, Utah, Nevada, and South Dakota a long list of converts is given, including Senator James H. Kyle of South Dakota; Bartlett Tripp, minister to Austria during the Cleveland administration; J. E. Richards, former governor of Montana. Then there is John T. Wheelwright of Massachusetts, who managed the political campaigns of William E. Russell.—New York Herald.

THE USUAL MINISTER

Dragging the pulpit down to the level of the platform and turning the house of worship into an ethical club room or a hall for economic debate is too common a thing in these days of novel innovations to require detailed description for purposes of identification. The preacher who rushes from the theme and work which his high calling prescribes for him into the domain of practical politics, ostensibly as a short cut to the realization of the kingdom, is the jack-of-all-trades most familiar in the public eye. So common have the secularized church and minister become that, when a minister arises to express his fidelity to and his confidence in the church as she is remembered, he at once strikes us as belonging to that class of irregularities which are fit subjects for newspaper comment because they have the elements to excite public curiosity and wonder. Rev. John C. Tebbetts, rector of St. Johns, placed himself in this class last Sunday when he preached his tenth anniversary sermon, for he said:

It has been my heart's desire in my preaching to hold closely to Jesus Christ and to interpret him as he is revealed in the old and new testaments and in the orderly and magnificent progress of His church. It has seemed to me that the pulpit should never give place to the platform. The pulpit has a sacred character of its own which it is the duty of every minister of Christ to jealously guard and studiously maintain—a character of which we are reminded at the beginning of every sermon by the use of the invocation: "In the Name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost." I believe it should be our rule to speak nothing here except in that name. There is no place to exploit one's ideas on political matters or the common, current topics of the day, such as are contained in the newspapers, or are heard on the street. If we have a message to bring to the public morality, he should by all means declare it, but he should first be careful that it is a message sent from God, and then he should speak as one who is bound by a very solemn duty, and not as a mere public lecturer who is out for hire. Nor do I think the pulpit is a place to be popularized by advertising sensational and startling topics or by straining at temporary effects to catch the ears of persons who run hither and there to be entertained. Better is it to make the pulpit known as the place where the Gospel of Christ is truly and simply preached. Better is it for you to know that when you come to this holy house you will hear something, however feebly spoken, which you can carry away into the business of the coming week—something to help you just a little along the way to God and eternal life. The older I get the more I mean to stick to that kind of preaching.

The whole case could not be better stated, and these few sentences must restore to some people the lost desire to go to church. The mind is in a famine for the preaching and the interpreting of Jesus. But they give us facts instead. They will write our novels for us, run our newspaper for us, be councilmen, congressmen, sheriffs, anything but preachers of Jesus. And when they do remain in the pulpit they will lecture us on "How to keep the affections of our husbands and wives," or announce that they will preach on "The 16 to 1 of the New Testament." And when they have a message bearing on the public morality they speak not with the authority of men consecrated to a divine purpose, but as men come in from the market place.

"Better is to make the pulpit known as the place where the gospel of Christ is truly and simply preached."

Beauty

Beauty was born of the world's desire For the wandering water, the wandering fire, Under the arch of her hurrying feet She has trodden a world full of bitterness.

The blood of the violet is in her veins, Her pulse has the passions of April rains;

Out of the heart of a slain flower God made her wreaths in one sweet hour.

Out of the wind he made her feet That they might be lovely and lurid and fleet; Out of a cloud he wove her hair, Heavy and black with the rain held there.

What is her name? There's none that knows— Mother o' Mischief, or Mouth o' Rose. What is her pathway? None may tell But it climbs to heaven and it dips to hell.

The garment on her is mist and fire, Anger and sorrow and heart's desire. Her forehead jewels an amethyst, The garland to her is love-in-a-mist.

Her girle is of the beryl stone, And one dark rose for her flower has grown. Filled to the brim with the strength o' the sun, A passionate rose and only one.

The bird in her breast sings all day long A wonderful, wistful, whispering song: The song that is of all passing things, None knows it—wingless or born with wings.

TAKING THE REINS.

Charley Hoyt's first winning heat of his life in 2:07½ constitutes a world's record.

Pilaster, 2:18½, by Egotist, is one of the best trotting race horses on the Lake Erie circuit.

Ananias, 2:06½, pacing, to wagon. If he keeps on, Mr. Emery will beat his turf record of 2:06 with him.

Britanna, the 3-year-old filly, by Tommy Britton, 2:07½, owned by E. A. Lord of Chicago, worked a mile in 2:18 at Joliet the other day.

Cutting's heat in 2:10½ at Joliet the other day was the fastest fifth heat that has been trotted this year. It could have been in 2:10 too.

Rustler, 2:15½, winner of seven races in eight starts this year, sold as a yearling for $35 and for $125 as a 4-year-old. He cost his present owner just $200.

Cheslen, 2:09½, recently pacing at Dover, N. H., is a new 2:10 performer for Gambetta Wilkes. Tonira F., the ex-western mare, was beaten but a head in the heat.

James Shevlin, the high priced Baron Wilkes, St. Albans, 2:18, trotter, that was a disappointment last year, connected with first money at Buffalo recently and now has a record of 2:10½.

The chestnut gelding Monopole, a grand circuit performer for several seasons, record 2:08½, pacing, in 1898, is now trotting and recently took a record of 2:23½ at Worcester, Mass.

Jim Ramey, the John R. Gentry pacer, cut his record to 2:14½ at Joliet the other day. He is a big stout gelding and very good and will step in 2:10 if his paces, which are under suspicion, do not give way.

It is said that the pacing mare Erolute, by Nominee, who took a record of 2:13 recently, has raised four colts and was never broken to harness until 8 years old. She is a sister of Erolute, 2:13½. W. L. Speers' bay colt Jay McGregor, by Jay Hawker, 3, 2:14½—Notre Dame, 2:28½, by Robert McGregor, 2:17½, trotter, a work winner at Lexington lately in 2:21½, repeating in 2:20½, last quarter in 8¼ seconds.—Horse Review.

MATRIMONIAL JARS.

A St. Louis man whose wife wants him to get a divorce so that she can marry another fellow refuses to do so, saying she must suffer for her sins. The "other man" seems to be having all the best of it in this mix up.—Chicago Times-Herald.

FILIPINOS FOR ANN ARBOR.

"We Like Best Your Apples and Pumpkin Pies," Says Spokesman.

Three Filipinos will be students at Ann Arbor when the college year opens. They are said to be the first Filipinos to matriculate at an American university. An educational society in Manila sent them to America.

Senores Arizaga of Manila and Juan Tecson of Balacan, 21 years old, will study civil engineering. Lorenzo Orinabla of Cavite, 11 years old, will remain eight years at the university.

The older boys wore khaki suits, with sandals, but the youngest boy had adopted fully the American costume of a boy in knickerbockers. This lad was the spokesman of the party. When asked by a New York World reporter what he liked best in the country, he gravely replied:

"We like, sir, your apples and your pumpkin pies."

"How did you learn English so quickly?" asked the reporter.

"From the soldiers, sir, in eight weeks," he replied.

"The plural of the nouns is hard to us. When you say 'men' in the plural, you do not say 'mans', but 'men', and when you say 'child' you say in the plural 'children'. That is very bad, sir; very bad," he added, shaking his head in a despairing way. "It is hard to keep to myself. And you change the position of the adjectives, sir," went on the little scholar, with grave face.

"We say in our country 'the sky blue is beautiful,' 'the girl pretty is here,' 'the horse black is on the street,' but here you say 'the blue sky is beautiful,' 'the pretty girl,' 'the pretty girl.' It is very, very bad, sir," he returned, shaking his head.

"What we want to see is the show," said Lorenzo, and the other boys smiled and bowed in unison.

"We wish to skate on the ice, of which we have heard so much."

The boys are already much at home and refuse to be surprised by any yarn spun for their benefit or by any sight shown to them.

Emile Zola expresses his profound sympathy with Maitre Labori, who has been boycotted because of his part in the Dreyfus case, and in a recent interview urged that every possible support and aid be given the brave lawyer.

Dr. H. F. Biggar, John D. Rockefeller's physician, says that Mr. Rockefeller is nearly physically perfect despite his 60 years. Dr. Biggar attributes this in part to Mr. Rockefeller's habit of sleeping for a few hours every afternoon.

Dr. S. Adolph Knopf of New York has received the prize of 4,000 marks offered by the tuberculosis congress at Berlin for the best essay on the subject "How to Fight Tuberculosis as a Disease of the Masses." Eighty-nine essays were offered for competition.

General Florentin, the new military governor of Paris, is a most distinguished officer and is known not only for gallant work in the field, but has also won high reputation among military men through various scientific works he has published. He is from the artillery.

A Washington stenographer who is often called in to assist the White House corps says: "President McKinley is the ideal man for a stenographer. He speaks just fast enough, with perfect distinctness and never hesitates for a word. Unlike most men, he evidently knows exactly what he is going to say before he tries to say it."

Lo Feng Lu, the Chinese minister to England, is a man of more than ordinary literary attainments. He has translated Blackstone's Commentaries in Chinese and only a few months since finished the translation of "The One Hundred Greatest Men in the Western World," a work of eight volumes. He is a Shakespearean student.

Lord Kinnaird is a Scotch peer of ancient lineage, great wealth, broad acres and a happy disposition. He is the eleventh Baron Kinnaird of Rossie, whose seat is at Inchture, Perthshire. He is a partner in Barclay's bank, and when at work in the city he shows that a seat in the house of lords has not robbed him of any business capacity.

Lord Hopetoun, the new governor general of Australia, is expected to dazzle the colonials with his magnificent entertaining. What he may do as governor general of the united colonies may be learned from the fact that when he was governor of one of them a few years ago his wine bill alone at the Government House in Melbourne amounted in one year to more than the sum total of his official salary.

LOCAL NEWS.

Hunter Killed a Parrot

Sportsmen have been out in numbers at Bennington, Vt., during the last few days, and the sharp ring of rifles has been heard from every bit of woodland. Partridges and gray squirrels are plentiful enough to give zest to the sport, but the foliage is thick and the game enjoys a pretty fair immunity from powder and ball. A good story is told of a Bennington sportsman who strayed away a few days ago as far as Williamstown, Mass., and in crossing a field to a patch of woods beyond he espied a handsome and queer looking bird feeding unconcernedly in a cornfield. The gun was quickly brought to a level, and the bird fell dead. The farmer soon appeared on the scene, and was very angry at the killing of his parrot, which was let loose daily for exercise and food. A long parley ensued, which ended in the sportsman giving the farmer $10—Troy Times.

ONESHIRE

Notice is given that the board of registrars of voters will be in session at the town office September 22 and October 20, from 2 to 5 and 7 to 9. On Saturday, October 27, from 12 to 10 p.m.

Miss Angie Leonard has gone to Hartford, Conn., where she has a position as teacher of French. Elizabeth Clark and daughter, Miss Evelyn Clark of Yates are at George Stowell's. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Oakman are visiting relatives in Boston.

BRYAN EARLY AT

WORK THIS MORNING

Speaking at 5 O'clock and Making Three Speeches Before Breakfast

Carthage, Mo., Sept. 11.—Bryan began his day's work at Springfield, Mo., at 5 o'clock, made three speeches before breakfast.

The second was at Aurora and the third at Monett.

It was barely daylight when Springfield was reached. Notwithstanding, there was a large crowd awaiting the arrival of the train and they cheered lustily when Bryan came into view. He did not speak to exceed five minutes at either Springfield or Aurora, but at Monett he left the car and addressed the crowd from the elevated porch of a nearby hotel.

His talks were along general lines, referring principally to trusts and imperialism, suggesting questions to be put to republican opponents.

At Monett he referred to the disposition to get as many speeches as possible out of him saying: "I agreed to make two speeches a day, but find it difficult to refuse invitations cordially extended to me to kill myself."

"I would speak longer were it absolutely required, but I understand I am still in Missouri and it is not necessary to speak very long here."

C. W. GALLUP

We take pleasure in announcing the appointment of Mr. C. W. Gallup as local representative of the American Industrial Company, 290 Broadway, New York. This company has been organized to place high grade investments, chiefly securities and bonds of great incorporated interests, in localities situated away from the financial centers. Sales will be made from $100 upward at prices not higher than prevailing quotations from the chief exchanges.

The investments are such as will interest conservative investors. The extreme unwisdom of embarking money in ventures that promise unreasonably high dividends is generally recognized. Such investments as Mr. Gallup offers are and always were safe ones, for it is not in nature that money should earn for its unworking owner more than a certain well-fixed rate. Mr. Gallup is glad to discuss the matter with anyone interested in learning more concerning his offerings.

A NIGHT OF TERROR.

"Awful anxiety was felt for the widow of the brave General Burnham of Machias, Me., when the doctors said she would die from pneumonia before morning," writes Mrs. S. H. Lincoln, who attended her that fearful night, but she begged for Dr. King's new discovery, which once saved her life, and cured her of consumption. After taking she slept all night. Further use entirely cured her." This marvelous medicine is guaranteed to cure all Throat, Chest and Lung Diseases. Only 50c and $1. Trial bottles free at Burlington & Darby's drug store.

SOUTH DAKOTA'S WIND CAVE.

It Is So Extensive That Some People Say the State Is Hollow.

The good people of South Dakota regard Wind cave as the tenth wonder of the world. From surface indications it would seem that a large part of the state is hollow, and the extent of Wind cave is unknown. It was discovered in 1877 by a notorious character known as "Lame Johnny," who distinguished himself on several occasions by holding up the Deadwood stage and ambushing caravans of unwary travelers. His lack of prudence in one of these adventures resulted in a "necktie party" which ended Johnny's career, so that he was not able to profit by his discovery. J. B. McDonald rediscovered the phenomenon in 1884 by finding a large gap in the plain through which the wind was pouring out with great force, like the draft of a chimney. There are similar vent holes at frequent intervals over the prairie, and the people of this neighborhood claim that several have been opened within the last few years.

The cave is divided into chambers. It is asserted that more than 3,000 different rooms have already been discovered, varying in size from 12 feet in diameter to over three acres, and this is believed to be only a small portion of the cavern.

The cave ceiling is not so high that of Mammoth cave, and the geologic formations are not as wonderful as those of Luray, but it has many attractions, and one in particular—the dryness of the atmosphere—which is said to afford instant and complete relief to asthmatic people. The temperature of the cave is about 45 degrees the year round, being unaffected by the variations of the thermometer outside, but the variations of the barometer are sharply perceptible. When the mercury rises on the outside, a current of air flows into the cave and follows a certain direction. When the glass falls, this current changes and the air flows in another direction. This phenomenon has not been studied by competent meteorologists, but is so apparent that it attracted the attention of the early explorers of the cavern.

The effect of the air on the cave upon asthmatic people is equally peculiar. A sufferer from that disease finds immediate relief upon entering the cave, and there will be no return of the trouble for several days after. This has suggested the possibility of a permanent cure for such as can have the privilege of visiting the cave frequently.—Chicago Record.

Back End Foremost

The sale of seats for "The Village postmaster" opened this morning, and there was another long line formed in front of the box office. There was a misunderstanding in regard to the place that caused much complaint. The real box office was lighted, and it was supposed that the sale would take place there, and the head of the line consequently formed there. When the sale did open, quite late, it was in the temporary box office, and those who were farthest back in the line were first served, being close to the office. This was regretted by the management as well as by those who were in line, except those nearest the office when it opened, and was due to a misunderstanding. The sale was large.

Big Rush for Coal

Coal consumers are rushing their orders into the coal offices, but so far no raise has been made. Dealers say they will make no raise in price on their present prices while their present stocks last. Then prices will be made according to the prices the dealers have to buy at. Pittsfield dealers have raised the price $1 a ton. Local dealers are not filling large orders.

Has Relatives in Galveston

Stuart F. Carter of this city is anxiously waiting news from his uncle Rev. John R. Carter, rector of Grace church in Galveston, who has not been heard from since the destruction of the city. Mr. Carter wired the mayor of Galveston, and received the reply that Rev. Mr. Carter had not been reported as among the missing. He then wired directly to his uncle, but has received no reply.

MAYOR WILKINSON'S APPEAL

Calls Attention of Public to the Needs of Galveston

Mayor Wilkinson sends the following letter in regard to the Galveston fund:

Editor of the Transcript:

Dear Sir—May I express through the columns of the Transcript the hope that our citizens will generally subscribe in aid of the thousands of sufferers who have been left "half dead," stripped, bleeding and utterly helpless by the terrible calamity which had laid prostrate the thriving city of Galveston. Every citizen in our land is responding nobly to their piteous cry for aid, yet much more must be done to save them from untold hardship and privation. I am confident that our people have generous and sympathetic hearts toward the suffering, I therefore earnestly invite them to manifest it by making a popular subscription through the Adams national bank who will forward it free of expense to the relief committee at Galveston. With the hope that every manufacturer, merchant and individual will promptly contribute as they feel able. Let none decline because they can only do a little and that the collections from the churches will all go through this source making the aggregate sum from North Adams something worthy of our good name. I remain with thanks, Yours very respectfully,

E. S. WILKINSON, Mayor
City Hall, Sept. 18, 1900.

Tonight's Entertainment

Tonight at the Columbia theater "A prince of Egypt" will be repeated for the benefit of the Galveston relief fund, and as the only public affair of the kind for this purpose, it should be well supported. Aside from the collections in the churches little has been done so far, and except for that the city would have fallen below the standard it should set for itself. The entertainment tonight is under the auspices of the Universalist church, and calls for hearty support. Everything in connection with the production is given freely. The house, orchestra, place, services of the director, and everything are offered for the cause, so that all that is taken in will go directly for the fund.

There will be a social dance at the town hall in Stamford Friday night, the 22nd. All are cordially invited. Tickets 10 cents. Herbert Coulter.

HIBBARD WON'T HAVE IT

Democrats Look to Greenfield to Supply Congressional Candidate

Ex-District Attorney Charles E. Hibbard, who has been prominently mentioned as the probable candidate for the democratic nomination for congress from this district in opposition to George P. Lawrence, announced last evening that under no condition would he consider the nomination. In fact Mr. Hibbard says that the party leaders have never made him an offer anyway. He said that while the nomination had not been offered to him, except as he had read of the contemplated action of the Pittsfield democrats in presenting his name, he felt that with his large law practice and other business, and at his age, he could not consider the offer even if made to him. He said that were he a younger man he would rather enjoy the excitement of a campaign for the congressional seat, but under existing circumstances he must decline further consideration of his name.

The decision of City Solicitor Crosby of Pittsfield not to enter the race owing to professional duties leaves the field open to the rest of the district. C. T. Callahan of Holyoke was in Pittsfield a day or two ago and was closeted with some of the prominent democrats of Pittsfield several hours. It was intimated last evening, when the retirement of Mr. Hibbard was learned, that Lawyer Davenport of Greenfield might be induced to accept the nomination.

The other democrats are said to be turning towards Greenfield with ex-Senator Parsons in mind.

In speaking of the republicans of this district, the Springfield Union has the following:

The republicans of the first congressional district are beginning to talk and all of them talk one way. Congressman George P. Lawrence has done nothing but make friends and a good record, and there will be no opposition to his re-nomination. Massachusetts has few congressmen who have in so short a time achieved so high a place in public esteem. He is a deep student and a ready debater and his well-known ability to make friends has given him a remarkable influence in the house. Measures that he favors were always sure of a big following, because of his influence. No republican has been mentioned, or will be, for his place.

There will be talk of ex-Senator Herbert C. Parsons as the democratic candidate, because of his desertion of the republican party and because it is hoped by nominating a man who has deserted the party to secure some republican votes. Mr. Parsons had a taste of democratic support last fall when he ran for senator, where party lines are little considered. Should he try this fall, in a presidential election, he must know that nine-tenths of the republicans who supported him last fall would desert him. Mr. Parsons' old senatorial district is not by any means all the first congressional district, and outside the senatorial district he has not half the strength of twenty democrats who could be named.

Of course the democrats will nominate a candidate, but it can be put down in advance that it will merely be a matter of form. Lawrence has the support of every republican in the district and a host of democrats besides.

OBITUARY

Mrs. Alphonse Gagnon

Dora, wife of Alphonse Gagnon, died this morning at her home, 91 Cliff street, aged 19 years. Her death was caused by consumption, with which she suffered for some time. She was an estimable young woman and had many friends who will mourn her death. She leaves besides her husband a child eight months old. The funeral will be held at Notre Dame church Thursday morning, and the burial will be in Southview cemetery.

Proceeds of County Meet

The officers of the Berkshire Inter-scholastic athletic association have received word from the manager of the Williams college athletic association that he will distribute the profits and prizes won at the meet in Williamstown last June as soon as college opens for the year, which will be on Thursday. It was agreed at the time that the schools should receive half of the proceeds of the meet. The annual meeting of the association will be held in December.

Prohibitionists May Speak

It is now probable that the special train which is to bring back from California the national nominees of the prohibition party may stop in Pittsfield and that several of the candidates may speak to a Pittsfield audience. John G. Woolley, candidate for president, in company with the vice presidential candidate and others, has been in the west furthering the interests of his candidacy, but has started on the return and it is probable that the itinerary will include this county.

Plans for the St. Jerome Banquet

The St. Jerome Temperance society of Holyoke is arranging for its banquet to the visiting delegates next month. The diocesan convention will be held in Holyoke, and the banquet in the St. Jerome hall to the visiting delegates to the convention. Following the convention the St. Jerome society will give a ball, also in honor of the delegations.

Drury Class Elections

Two classes at Drury held their class elections today. The class of 1901 elected the following: President, Jerry Wall; vice president, Margaret Chase; secretary and treasurer, Edwin Warner. The class decided to have a class hop on the Friday night after Thanksgiving.

The class of 1902 elected the following: President, Harold Richmond; vice president, Miss Outing; secretary and treasurer, C. G. Bartlett, Jr.

MAY BUILD POLLING PLACES

Ward 5 Voting Room Declared Illegal, Wards 2 and 5

The city council on polling places held an important meeting yesterday afternoon. At the request of the committee City Solicitor Ashe was present, and was asked in regard to the legality of the polling place in ward 5. This has been in the Bartlett block, where Mr. Bartlett's drug store is situated. As reported in this paper the other day, Pittsfield raised the question as to whether such an arrangement did not break the law, which says that no polling place shall be in a building where liquor is sold, a similar case having existed there. Mr. Ashe gave it as his opinion that the polling place is illegal, and a new one will be secured.

The committee discussed the situation, and it is believed that in ward 2 and 5 it will be necessary next year to lease land and build polling places especially for the city.

AT THE NORMAL SCHOOL

Some Comment on the Entering Class, Based on Residence

From the Pittsfield Eagle:

According to the newspaper reports, the state normal school at North Adams will receive a new class of students this year numbering 31 persons, representing fourteen cities and towns. A canvass of the 31 new students reveals the fact that fourteen come from North Adams, one from Adams, one from Williamstown, the two latter places being within truly distance of the school, thus showing that over one-half of the students will not have to board away from home while attending the school.

Of the remaining fifteen, four come from Pittsfield, Windsor sends two, Cheshire one, Ashley Falls one, Hinsdale one, while from beyond the tunnel four different towns send one each, and Vermont sends two, besides. It is noted that only one student is entered from the county south of Pittsfield. It is somewhat surprising that the towns of Adams and Williamstown do not send more students to the normal school for the electric cars run into both places from North Adams. It would seem, too, that the youth in northern Berkshire are not taking the interest in the new school they ought, and for that matter, it would seem that four is a pretty small number to represent a city of the size of Pittsfield; perhaps more young people could be induced to attend from here if the matter were talked up in our schools.

For an inexpensive and sensible education, the normal schools of the state present an admirable opportunity for our young people, and more of them should take advantage of it. At present, outside of North Adams, the rest of the county does not seem to take very strongly to the school, and for that matter, fourteen is not a large number for the Tunnel City.

THREE INQUESTS HELD

Two of Deaths on Railroad and One of Hebrew Boy

Three inquests were held this morning before Judge Phelps in the district court room. Two were on deaths on the railroad, and the third was on the death of a Jewish baby, as a result of circumcision.

This latter was the death of Abraham Kaliner. Death resulted a few hours after circumcision, from loss of blood. The rabbi, under whose direction the operation was performed, and the parents of the child, were the witnesses, the physician's statement having been made in the medical examiner's report. The death of the tramp killed in the tunnel last Saturday and of Louis Marini, the boy killed on the tracks while picking up coal, were also gone over.

Judge Phelps will make his reports later.

Important Testimony Omitted.

An exposure of the peace tells the following story: During the time he was in office a young man was brought up before him on the charge of gambling. The evidence was conclusive, and the judge imposed a fine, which was paid on the spot. When the case adjourned, the defendant remained behind and asked the judge for a few moments' conversation.

"The case is over," he began, "and the fine has been paid and it's settled as far as that goes, but I want to tell you how it happened. You see, the cop told us if we didn't stop playing he'd run us in. Well, we were playing a jack pot. I had an ace, three queens and a king before the draw. I discarded the ace and king and drew another queen. There were good hands out against me, and they tried to bluff me and I stood with them. Now, what I want to know is what you would have done in a case like that."

"Stand with them if the gallows had been in sight!" cried the excited judge. "Why in the name of common sense was not that evidence brought out at the trial?"—Salt Lake Tribune.

He Won the Carpenter.

The great sculptor Chantrey commenced his career as a journeyman carpenter. In connection with which fact there is an old story told. One day while inspecting a castle vase in the house of the wealthy poet Rogers he asked, with a smile, who made the table on which the vase stood. "Curiously enough," said Rogers, "it was not made by a cabinet maker, but by a common carpenter."

Chantrey asked, "Did you see it made?" and Rogers, supposing the query to be one of incredulity, replied positively: "Certainly. I was in the room while the man finished it with the chisel, and I gave him instructions in placing it."

Chantrey laughed and said: "You did. I remember that and all the circumstances perfectly well."

"You!" exclaimed the poet.

"Yes," said Chantrey quietly. "I was the carpenter."—Kansas City Independent.

ADAMS

CAPTURED YOUNG EAGLES.

There is at Gustav Thiel's farm in the Belknap pines a couple of young eagles which were captured some months ago by Mr. Thiel's brother-in-law, a boy about 10 years old, and a boy named Langford, who lives on a farm on the North road. The birds were taken from their nest in the Raven rock, and the parent birds still live in the rock. How the boys learned that the eagles were there was from the fact that the parent birds were accustomed to steal chickens and fly with them to the rocks.

The capturing of the young eagles was a difficult task. One of the boys with a rope around his waist was anchored from the top of the Raven rock to the nest and he secured the young birds with a pole to which was attached a copper wire.

The young eagles are about as large as a hen, their backs are coal black and their breasts brown and black, speckled. Their legs are yellow and they have long talons, a flat head with large black eyes and a strong beak. They eat raw meat voraciously and their call is very weird. Mr. Thiel thinks they are what are termed stone eagles.

CHANGE IN DANCE AT FOREST PARK.

In Monday's Transcript it was announced that Germania band would hold a dance at Forest park pavilion, Saturday evening. A change however has been made and the dance to be held there at that time will be by the Forest Park drum corps. The drum corps had supposed that they had that date secured and so the band very graciously has postponed its dance until a week from Friday night. Palmer's orchestra has been engaged to furnish the music for the drum corps' dance.

The regular meeting of the Knights of Columbus will be held Wednesday evening and the second degree will be exemplified.

The regular meeting of the Woman's Relief corps and Sons of Veterans will be held this evening.

LOST ON A PLUQUE.

Local people were much disappointed at the defeat of Company M in Springfield, Monday. The score is given in another column and shows the scores of 1 company of Northampton and M of this town as tied, but the former ranked better. This is the second defeat which Company M has met with in all the contests of the kind and it was I company that defeated them both times. Company M's defeat is due entirely to a fluke. Private Murphy shot a four of a wrong target and were it not for this there would have been no tie. It will be seen that Private Cadigan was as usual, able to secure one of the highest scores. All the old members of the team shot well but the new men, and there were a good many this year, did not shoot up to standard.

THIS MORNING'S COURT NEWS.

There was a busy session at the district court room this morning. Camille Phillips was charged with non-support. It was alleged that he worked in Greenfield and was wont to go and come from there and stayed when here with his family. He, however, never offered to assist the family, though he showed plenty of money at times. He was ordered to pay $20. J. Lander of Maple Grove on a similar charge had his case continued until Thursday day. C. F. Wood for disturbing the peace and fighting had his case continued until next week Tuesday. Four drunks were fined. Two of them were man and wife and were found beastly drunk on Glen street. The continued case against William Knapp for adultery was also tried.

FOR A HORSE RACE.

There has been considerable talk about a horse race between Fred Baker's chestnut mare, "Fannie," and Mr. Tremblay's bay mare, "Nellie." The latter defeated "Fannie" in one of the races at the North Berkshire driving clubs race in North Adams several months ago. She defeated the chestnut quite easily. Mr. Baker, however, claims that his mare did not act well nor does he think her driver drove as he should. Both owners have come considerable talking and there is little doubt but that a race will be arranged for a purse of $100. Mr. Baker says he is willing to race and will drive his own mare.

AT RICHMOND THEATER.

About 50 people from this town attended the opening of the new Richmond theater at North Adams, Monday evening. The service on the street railway was good and the crowd cars were thoroughly appreciated. Those who attended the play expressed themselves as highly pleased and the new theater was the subject of many compliments.

Tomorrow evening there will be another attraction at the theater, "A Lion's Heart," by Carl A. Harson. It is a strong play and will also be well attended by local theater goers.

The L. L. Brown Dyer company is having their permanent home on Harmony street painted and repaired.

The regular meeting of Greylock Lodge, A. O. U. W., will be held this evening.

The regular meeting of the Y. P. S. C. E. will be held this evening.

The ladies of the Methodist church will serve supper at the church parlors tomorrow evening.

The Renfrew Caledonian club will meet this evening.

Letter Carrier Duggan and family have left for a visit in Cohoes, N. Y., and will also spend a week in the Adirondacks. Carrier Ansie is substituting for Mr. Duggan.

Mrs. R. W. Stetson of Louisville, Ky., has returned home after a visit with her father, Martin Baldy of Allen street.

William Boyington has been appointed baggage master at the Adams depot.

John Shields of Arlington, N. J., is the guest of friends in town.

A daughter was born Sunday to Mr. and Mrs. Napoleon Blanchard of Springfield.

Miss Rose Riley of West Stockbridge is visiting in town.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hollister of Pittsfield spent Sunday in town.

Mrs. Arthur Hall has returned to Tupper, Florida.

Professor F. E. McSweeney of Pittsfield has been the guest of Professor J. Mulmby of First street.

Mrs. W. Marshall of Pittsfield has been visiting Mrs. T. P. Welch of the Adams house.

Hon. and Mrs. W. B. and Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Plunkett are in New York city.

The American order of Foresters will meet this evening.

Lawyer E. K. McPeck has returned from his vacation.

The wedding of Miss Ella G. Hughes and Rue Kallitsky of Philadelphia will take place tomorrow at St. Thomas' church parsonage.

Hemp Industry of the Philippines.

The entire hemp industry of the Philippines is still worked by primitive methods and with simple contrivances, says Edwin Wildman in Harper's Weekly. The native, though unambitious himself, is jealous of the Chinaman and is averse to the Celestial getting control of the plantations or contracts, while scorning to date with odds himself. The "Chena," however, has made inroads in this industry as well as in others in the Philippines. Had he not, the development would not have been as rapid as it has. The native is thoroughly capable and understands the treatment of the plant and its harvesting, and could be induced to work with regularity he would be as good a laborer as the Chinaman, but the Celestial usually controls the baling and local marketing of the hemp.

AN UNLUCKY HARE.

Uncle Eli Tells the Children an Instructive Fable.

(Copyright, 1900, by C. B. Lewis.)

A hare who was safely resting in her burrow one day received a call from the Fox, who invited her to come out for a walk with him.

"But you will eat me," protested the hare.

"Nonsense! It is true that I have eaten hares, but it was only when I could get nothing else. I pledge you my word not to harm you. You must realize that it will be a favor to your cap to be seen walking with me."

The hare hesitated for a while, but finally came out, and the two walked away together, but they had not gone far when they heard the howling of dogs.

"What's that?" asked the hare as she stopped to listen.

"I am sorry to say that the dogs are after you," replied the fox. "You'd better take off through the brush at once."

As the hare flew through the forest she hid herself in a brush heap, and when the hounds came up they followed on after the hare and caught and killed her.

Getting Some Returns.

The principal magnate of the Great American Sure-Ty Investment company stood on the top of the Eiffel tower and slipped handfuls of gold and silver coins down upon the pavement far below.

Foremost in the crowd of persons who braved the shower and picked up the coins as they fell was a giant, belated man who spoke not a word of French, but could express himself in excellent English.

"My George!" he exclaimed. "This is the first chance I've had to collect a coat of diamonds on the stock I've got in the concern that ship runs!"

And he went on collecting it—Chicago Tribune.

LIONS, TIGERS AND ELEPHANTS.

What an Animal Trainer Says About Their Traits in Captivity.

"Personally I would rather undertake to train jungle bred lions than lions that are born in captivity. You may win the regard of the first class, but the others are so accustomed to seeing everybody that they respect nobody. The idea that lions desire to eat up their trainers is preposterous. I feed these lions 12½ pounds of the meat every day at 5 o'clock. If a lion was so richly hungry, he would eat it at once. When a lion gets mad and knocks you down with a blow from his paw, you must lie still. It would be useless to fight back, for if he should close his jaws no bone would stand the pressure. I do not fear the lion's jaw and teeth—the paws and claws are the things that have left their marks all over my body. Their claws are sharp as fishhooks and take hold in the same fashion.

"Yes, I have been nipped by lions a number of times, generally in the fleshy part of the hand and the leg; the teeth have gone clean through with a snap. Still the claws are the things that make the life of the lion tamer an 'unpleasant risk' in life insurance writing.

"Tigers are much brighter than lions and can be taught many tricks, but they can never be relied on, as treachery appears to be their disposition and inheritance. They are tremendous fighters, and if they cannot get up a row among themselves they are ready to help others.

The closest call I ever had in my life was when a jaguar got over the partition in the big den into the cage occupied by a lion and undertook to take a bone away from the latter. I went in and undertook to drive the jaguar back into her own cage. The beast turned upon me and clawed me horribly, while the lion took a whack at my back. When I was finally dragged out of the cage, the new suit of clothes that I wore was a mass of tatters, and I was covered and bloody from head to heels. This famous fight occurred in Washington with the W. C. Coup show. I had a number of encounters with Wallace, who was set down on the bills as 'the man eater.' He had chewed and clawed many men, but never eaten one, but he occasionally feasted on a horse.

So many stories have been told about Wallace by trainers that he is so famous that I would be idle for me to repeat them, as I had him all the time he was in this country. That famous lion died two years ago in an express car while on his travels.

"Tigers have a fancy for sliding on their backs and getting up at a disadvantage, as they lie and claw upward. The moment they are down a cage they are liable to slide its whole length and drag you down before you can raise your whip.

"But, take my word for it, the most dangerous animal you can encounter in a menagerie is a 'bad elephant.' I've been with 'em for 40 years, and I know."

TRICKS OF THE TRADE.

Men Do Not Always Get the Cigar They Pay For.

At the cigar stand of an up town hotel a guest asked the dealer for an imported cigar.

The dealer handed out a handful of cigars which were in all appearance the real thing.

"Are these real imported cigars?" asked the purchaser, depositing his quarter on the little change mat.

"Yes, sir," responded the other.

"It is too late a night for a dispute," said the guest to a reporter, "and since the cigar is a good one I will smoke it, but it is not an imported cigar that he sold me, though it resembles one. It was made in this country of imported tobacco."

He called this dealer down, he would say, "What's the difference?" as the tobacco was grown on the island of Cuba.

"I am an internal revenue inspector, and I can tell at a glance whether a cigar is the imported article in the box from Havana or whether it is made in this country of imported leaf."

He said many more words and he was the average judge of cigars cannot detect it is no excuse why he does not get what he calls for. Who can tell the difference between a Paris made gown and one made here of the same imported materials? Very few. The difference is usually about $100 in favor of the dresser.

With cigars it is another matter. Some dealers will tell you that we make a better article of imported rolled tobacco than the Cuban cigar makers. Perhaps so. The dealer makes a bigger profit on the sale, and that is what he is looking out for.

"If you desire to buy a cigar made by Cuban workmen and the real imported thing, examine the box for the internal revenue stamps. They will be observed, if you look carefully, and are six in number. All bear the words 'Imported cigars, United States customs,' and the number of the cigars contained in the box plainly engraved at each end of the stamp, in the center of which is the engraving of a steamship.

"The stamp for the box containing 25 cigars is smaller than the others and is drab in color. The box containing 50 cigars is distinguished by a green stamp, the 100 blue, the 250 red and the 500 yellow ochre in delicate tints.

"There is a difference in both the smoke and the flavor of a cigar made by Havana workmen and those made at the principal tobacco markets here. Our makers do not import the very finest leaf for the very excellent reason that the Cubans won't allow it to leave the island, desiring it for their own high grade cigars of London and Paris. The Cubans roll their cigars in a way peculiar to themselves, and when an amateur for the genuine article he wants it and ought to have it."—Washington Star.

HE SHAVED GENERAL MILES.

It Was Bill's First Appearance in the Role of Barber.

During the autumn of 1899 Major General Miles and a party of Washington friends arranged for a bear hunt in the mountains of New Mexico. They arrived at Magdalena in a special car and were met at the station by Captain Slocum with Troop E of the Seventh United States cavalry, detailed to act as escort to the party. Proceeding at once to the Hoffman ranch, about 50 miles westward, they pitched camp and next day started in to hunt bears.

Shortly after they left Magdalena a ranchman rode into town with the startling intelligence that he had met Bill Parks, an old resident, out on the mountains. Bill told him that he had shot and killed a prominent citizen of Magdalena and was trying to elude a posse sent in pursuit of him; also that the town had been visited by a lot of little men who overturned all the buildings, the conclusion reached was that Bill had gone "looney." A party of friends was soon organized and on Bill's trail.

On the second day's hunt his hiding place was discovered. He protested against returning to Magdalena, fearing a lynching, as the men he imagined he had killed were very popular. However, after a long palley and with the assurance that he would be protected, he consented to return.

The posse and Bill reached Magdalena four days prior to the return of the bear hunters. Bill was confined in a room for two days, and, having greatly improved, was then liberated. The day following his release Bill walked into the Eclipse saloon, and in a corner saw an old, named barber chair. Remembering that he knew a thing or two about "barbering," he begged the proprietor to give him the job of shaving him.

The barber, who was named "Barber," gave him the consent. Bill fixed up the old chair, sharpened a few rusty razors, secured a towel or two and was ready for the rush to begin. The rush came not, but Bill kept on waiting and was present when the general and his party returned from what had been a successful bear hunt and took up their quarters in the special car. The general, being very much in need of a shave, inquired of a loiterer if there was a barber shop in town. The loiterer, who was a wag, pointed out Bill's place, whereupon the general remarked that he would go there in a few minutes. The news spread quickly over town that Bill was going to shave the famous General Miles. Bill selected his razor, got out a clean towel and awaited the arrival. It was evident to onlookers that he was growing nervous. When the general arrived at the saloon, standing in the room as at a premium. With some difficulty he managed to reach the chair, where Bill received him with a courtesy bow. When the operation began there was a full house. Those not close enough to see the performance were rewarded by hearing the scrape, scrape of the dull razor as it was drawn across the victim's face. General Miles took his medicine without a murmur and bravely closed his eyes. This encouraged Bill, who thought the razor was working as smoothly that his customer had gone to sleep. He regained his nerve and at the end of ten minutes the ordeal was at an end. The general looking much relieved, looked for a quarter and departed. Bill's face beamed with pride while congratulations poured in from all sides.

The next morning Bill put up his sign over his mirror, "General shaving, 25 cents." Bill's fame soon spread throughout the surrounding country and his chair was besieged by customers who wanted to be shaved by the man who shaved General Miles.—New York Sun.

LOOKING OUT FOR THE "CHILLUNS."

The Old Negro Declared His Authority on the Battlefield.

"There were four of us boys," Major Pelham said, "and we went home together to save the Confederacy. Our mother had the proper things, as she thought, packed for us, and also sent along a faithful old negro, who had been prominent in our bringing up, to take care of us in the army and 'wait on' us. The last words she said to him at the lawn gate were:

"Now, take good care of my boys, Tom, and Tom was as certain that he would be successful in carrying out her repeated injunctions as he ever had been in former years that he would bring us home safe from a possum hunt.

THEATER OPENED

The New Richmond Playhouse Delights a Great Audience

MISS VIOLA ALLEN'S NEW PLAY

A Success on its First Night, and a Fitting Piece For the Dedication of the New Theater. A Speech by Mr. Richmond

The play in North Adams last night was more than the amusement of an evening. It was the beginning of new possibilities in the way of theatrical attractions, the dedication of a new play house which supplies what the city long has needed in the way of accommodation for plays of prominence. "In the palace of the king" was on the stage, and "in the palace of the play" would have described the feelings of most as they entered and saw the curtain rise on a stage and a house that do credit to the entire community as well as to the builders.

The audience that filled the house to overflowing was called together not only by the magic of Miss Allen's name, but by the fact that this was the opening of the new theater for which the city has long waited. The two together were able to attract an audience that put "standing room only" at a premium, and the seating capacity of the house did not begin to measure the number who were present.

A cold, rainy night did not affect the attendance, although it lessened the promptness with which the audience gathered, and it was not till well along in the first scene the house was filled. And of the opening, nothing but the word "success" can be used in description. The people of the city were delighted with the new theater, and no less with the new play. For it was a first night in a double sense, for the house and for the play. There were two sets of nerves a tingle, those of the management of the theater, and those of the management of the piece. But in spite of the fact that both were new, there was no hitch of any kind that was noticeable by the audience, and the entire event passed off as smoothly as could have been the case if the house was an old institution, and the play a production of years' standing.

The house was complete was in itself something of a triumph. Many had been the prophecies that it could not be ready. But in every respect, except for the entrance, the theater was as ready for the public as the public was ready for the theater. The entrance was not completed, but so nearly so that it showed promise of what was to be, and it required little imagination to see a long lobby, prettily finished in tile, with plants and other decorations, and enlivened with the announcements of coming attractions.

Once in the theater, and the whole thing was complete. The dome foyer, opening from the end of the lobby, could hardly be appreciated, so rapid was the movement of the crowd through it, but to those who stopped to enjoy its artistic effect, was shown a feature that adds much to the beauty and attractiveness of the interior. Passing from the lobby into the auditorium, the well blended shades of red in which the house is decorated gave an air of warmth to the whole and until the curtain went up, time was pleasantly passed in enjoying the rich yet not gaudy beauties of the house itself.

Promptly at 8 o'clock the orchestra, under the leadership of Byron W. Briggs, began the dedication overture, which was pleasingly rendered, as was all the music of the evening. As the orchestra struck the opening notes of this, the auditorium curtain was raised, showing the deep curtain of dark red velvets, harmonizing with the walls, and dressing the whole front of the house with simple but effective coloring. The curtain of the play rose just at 8.15. The long waits which had been anticipated for the first night were not in evidence, and although the change of scenes was not made as quickly as scheduled, it was with one or two exceptions done almost on schedule time, and the curtain fell on the last act at 11.35.

During nearly the whole of the first scene the people were still taking their seats, and the effect of much of the scene was lost in the confusion. After that, however, the play held the attention of the audience from curtain to curtain, and could hardly be pronounced a more complete success.

By the second scene Miss Allen had got control of the situation, and the close of every scene was an ovation for her. It was at the end of the fifth, or throne room scene, that the greatest time of all came. Two curtain calls were not enough. During the second, a great cluster of flowers, standing four feet from the floor, was placed on the stage, sent by an anonymous "admirer," whose admiration was very great indeed.

"Miss Allen was at her best in showing her appreciation of this, and another round of applause was the result, which brought her, with several others of the company, in front of the curtain, the two small doors at the sides of the proscenium arch being used for the first time. If Miss Allen had been an actor instead of an actress, a speech would have been the inevitable result.

"We will now listen to a speech by one of the Richmonders," said Col. Bracewell, and sat down. There was a moment's hesitation, and then C. Q. Richmond, who was sitting near the front of the house, rose and walked to the front. He said:

"This was greeted with a storm of applause equal to that which a moment before had been for Miss Allen. 'More applause for their courage,' shouted Col. Bracewell, and again applause reigned.

"We will now listen to a speech by one of the Richmonders," said Col. Bracewell, and sat down. There was a moment's hesitation, and then C. Q. Richmond, who was sitting near the front of the house, rose and walked to the front. He said:

"Ladies and gentlemen! This is a part of the performance which has not been rehearsed as carefully as that on the stage, and it will not have the same smoothness. It would be a stolid man, however, who could resist such an ovation. Heavily and sincerely I thank you. It would be idle to appropriate this as a personal tribute. It shows appreciation that North Adams now has a modern play house, which makes for the well being and happiness of the city. Others are deserving of credit. The architect who planned the structure, the builders who worked on it, those who carried hods and who sawed wood, are all deserving of this applause. I can only thank you, for what you have done tonight, and hope that this will prove a joy to the whole community."

Of the Play

The play is Lorimer Stoddard's dramatization of F. Marion Crawford's new novel of the same name. It does not follow the lines of the novel, however, as closely as do many dramatizations, the playwright having heightened the dramatic effect by condensing much, and especially in the latter part, having changed the plot completely. Although the novel is still unfinished, Miss Allen said last night that the ending of play and novel were quite different, this difference being to be most marked from the fourth scene, where the attempted murder of the cardinal occurs.

Most striking of all are features the scenery for the piece, and the costumes. Both are lavishly rich, and called for applause regardless of the actors. If the desire of the management of the house was to secure an opening attraction a piece that would show the full capacities of the stage, the desire was amply met. The scenes for the great hall, the throne room and the king's chamber, were especially noteworthy. Miss Allen's costumes were brilliant, and were closely equalled by those of Miss Van Dresser, as well as by all the ladies of the court.

And as to the possibilities of the play. It is of increasing interest through all six scenes, with two climaxes, in both of which Miss Allen is the central figure, hurling defiance, first at her father, and next at the king. The first scene is disappointing, being merely introductory, and having little intensity, as presented last evening. But from that time on there can be no complaint.

It furnishes Miss Allen with a part in which she is called on for much more than she was in "The Christian," which made her reputation, and this was what was desired. Less of the light, hoydenish work of the former play is given her, and she is called upon for more of the terribly earnest work of a class with her appeal for life to John Storm in "The Christian."

Comparisons are inevitable and the feeling must be confessed that Miss Allen is at her best when she has the lightest work to do. To romp, and toss her head, and carry her love on her sleeve is to put her at her best. She struggles with great emotions. When, in the third scene, she meets what seems to be her fate, and defies her father, she rises to the full possibilities of the part, exceeding anything she has ever done before. To have carried this same strength through the difficult closing scene when she defies the king would have given the play an ending, and would have given her a mastery, that could not be surpassed. That she did not carry the same strength may have been due to the newness of the play, but it seemed beyond her voice and command. Miss Allen wants to be in motion when she has hard work to do. Her face and her voice are less facile for the display of great emotion. And so in the last scene she lost a source of power that was given her in the third. But none the less did she win a notable triumph, and had the hearts of the audience with her.

The support is good throughout. Robert T. Haines is the hero, Don John of Austria, and his work as a romantic actor was fair, although there was some disappointment with it. And he ranted in what is his most difficult scene, the struggle with his own love and ambition in the chamber scene with Miss Allen.

William Norris as the court fool stood high in the play, and won deserved applause. Never once did he neglect to make the most telling points in his line count for their full worth. Charles Kent was King Philip of Spain, and had more work to do than did the hero, and more difficult work. He did it in the old time villain, more villainishly than king.

Martha Van Dresser, as the princess Eboli, the "villainess," was next to Miss Allen the leading woman of the cast, and did her work well. Gertrude Norman as the blind Inez had a sweet face and voice, and was more than a mere relief for Miss Allen's sprightly work, which the latter might have made her, had that actress been less of an artist.

It was Clarence Handyside as the captain of the guards and father to Dona Dalores who stood most conspicuously equal to his part, in voice, manner and intensity. Miss Allen's father, C. Leslie Allen, was the king's secretary, and did satisfactorily.

The verdict of the house last night was that the play had "succeeded" written in it. It seems probable that Miss Allen has done what she wished, and found a worthy successor to "The Christian." It is impossible to tell what a week on the road will do for the company, but if the improvement is as marked as it was during the last three days of rehearsal, they have the play.

Of the House

Much has been written of the house, so much that many went prepared to be disappointed. Their only disappointment was in not being disappointed. Surprise at its beauty was the only sentiment expressed, and today there is only one opinion, that the city now has a house of which it may feel proud without reservation.

The interior has been described in detail, so that further mention of it would be merely to repeat what has been said. It is enough to say that E. S. Martin, representing Gimbel brothers of Philadelphia, has done his world well. The decorations are in perfect taste, warm in effect and harmonious in design. The house, designed by L. L. Bridge of Springfield, is convenient and comfortable.

Of the others who had a share in its making are H. P. Cummings & Co. of Worcester and Boston, the builders, A. W. Hunter & Co. of this city, who did the plumbing, Cleghorn & Co. of Boston, the steam fitters and builders of the ventilating system, and McKenney

& Waterbury of Boston, who furnished the electric light fixtures.

Notes

The New York Herald's critic says that this is the first time that a novel's dramatization has been put on the stage in advance of the publication of the book.

The ushers did their work remarkably well, and there was comparatively little confusion as the audience assembled. There was a good deal of delay at the close at the men's check room, and some were not out of the theater till three quarters of an hour after the drop of the curtain.

The rain boomed the business of the livermen but made the audience late in arriving.

Several representatives of Leibler & Co. were in the house, and expressed themselves as pleased.

The play is produced in Springfield tonight.

The completion of the house in time was a triumph of "hustle," and those who said it could not be done were in back seats.

During the day yesterday Miss Allen and the members of the company received fully 100 telegrams containing the best of wishes of friends, while some congratulations came after the production. Among the number were several cable messages for Miss Allen from friends abroad, and one from F. Marion Crawford, author of the novel, from Italy, in which he expressed his best wishes for Manager Tyler and Miss Allen.

The work of the orchestra under Leader Briggs last evening was worthy of special mention, as being most excellent. And C. Q. Richmond said his heart was not rehearsed!

COMPANY M WAS SECOND

Northampton Company Won Regimental Shoot by Close Margin

Exceptionally good scores were made at the annual competitive shoot of the Second regiment, which was held yesterday at the Lake Lookout range. Although cloudy well into the afternoon, still the conditions are good, for there was no perceptible wind and no shadows were cast, while the rain did not begin until after the last company had finished shooting. Taken as a whole, the average was much higher than that of last year.

I company of Northampton made the highest score and won the trophy awarded by the state. While in former years there have been three trophies, this year only one was given. Just what this will be is not yet known, probably it will be an engraving. M company of Adams was tied with I in number of points won, but I had but one miss, while the Adams company had two, the former was given honor place. Each scored 395 points. This is a decided loss for M company, as last year it scored 414, while I did not do better than 343, which makes a gain of fifty-three points for the latter.

Private Johnson of B company, of Springfield and Private Cadigan of M company of Adams made the best individual scores, each scoring 45 out of a possible 50.

The Adams company's score follows:

Capt. G. J. Crozier,	45 44 45 45 44 44-43
Sergt. Hodecker,	54 44 55 45 34 44-43
Sergt. King,	43 53 34 44 44 44-39
Corp. Grant,	44 44 44 42 43 0-23
Musican Moran,	45 44 54 44 45 44-44
Priv. Hand,	43 44 44 45 54 44-39
Priv. O'Neill,	45 34 44 43 34 44-35

TRIED TO SECURE RELEASE

Petition for Writ of Habeas Corpus for Cheshire Man Denied

There was a hearing before Judge Slocum in the probate court yesterday in the matter of a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, whereby Harry Phillips, 27, could be released from the state farm at Bridgewater. Phillips' home is in Cheshire and the petitioner is his father. He was committed to the institution a little less than a year ago for an indefinite period on the charge of vagrancy. Several weeks ago he was transferred by the authorities to the insane ward, and Gordon Bliss of Cheshire, who claimed to have become interested in young Phillips' welfare, represented to the court that the physicians of the farm had recommended his removal from the institution on the grounds that he had been partly cured and could be looked after by his relatives. Dr. Charles A. Drew, resident physician of the state farm, was present at the hearing and declined to recommend young Phillips' removal from the institution, because he was still more or less mentally deranged. Judge Slocum dismissed the case.

BLACKINTON.

A large number from this part of the city attended the opening of the new Richmond theater last night. A republican marching club has been organized in ward one also a drum corps and a campaign glee club. The glee club numbers 16 voices and will sing at the rally to be held at Odd Fellows' hall Thursday evening.

Napoleon Pelky and family returned home from Redford, N. Y., Saturday evening.

Miss Libbie Campbell of Pittsfield is a guest of Mrs. H. Reynolds and family for two weeks.

The Sunday school teachers of the Blackinton union church met last evening in Christian Endeavor hall.

Hereafter the afternoon session of the Blackinton schools will begin at 1.30 instead of 1 o'clock as formerly.

Ernest Waterhouse of Providence, P. I., who spent Sunday in town the guest of his brother, John Waterhouse, returned home today. Mr. Waterhouse is a member of the firm of Child Waterhouse, who run the Earncraft mills in Providence.
